THE state, Governor Futrell tells his special school commission today, must guarantee every child the right to a grammar school education—but the local community must look after the high school.

Japan Sees U. S. A. as Villain Barring March to Destiny

America Plots to Halt Expansion of Empire, Says Tokio

MANY GRIEVANCES
Offended by Exclusion Act and Our Fortifying of Pacific

This is the third of five articles on Japan, first of several series which will be written by William Philip Simms, famed war correspondent and foreign affairs expert, while on a world tour for NEA Service.

By WILLIAM PHILIP SIMMS
(Copyright, 1934, NEA Service, Inc.)

Tokio, Japan—Here is solved the riddle of why Japan expects eventual war with the United States.

To Americans, this has always been a profound mystery. They have not been able to see where the just aims of the two countries clashed at any point. Their trade and other legitimate interests are complementary, not competitive.

Yet two hemispheres continue as full of war talk as the atmosphere above Vesuvius is of sparks. Especially does one hear such talk in Japan. Why?

The answer is: China. Japan believes the United States is out to checkmate her in her drive to create a Japanese empire on the Asiatic mainland.

Way down in their hearts the Japanese believe expansion for them is a matter of national life or death. Like other peoples, they sincerely do not want war.

But they are prepared to fight any power, or any combination of powers, that stands in the way.

Two Nations Far Way

They have fought four wars in recent times—two against China, one against Russia, and one against Germany—in pursuit of this policy. And they will fight another and another if necessary to carry it to fulfillment. The odds against them are a secondary consideration.

Japan sees two countries in her way. One is Russia. The other is the United States.

Britain and France—the other two major Pacific powers—she does not fear. She might handily come to China were it not for the Soviet Union and America.

That is why world chancelleries keep on harping on war between Japan and Russia and Japan and the United States.

Japan has very definitely embarked upon a policy calculated to make her supreme in eastern Asia and the western Pacific. This may sound like a great war dream, but realists admit the world has reverted to pre-war conditions. The post-war peace machinery has broken down.

Time to Strike is Near

Unless she breaks out of her own little islands, Japan reasons, while the world in general and China in particular are chaotic, she must be content to remain there forever—eventually, perhaps, becoming a vassal of her colossal neighbor across the China sea.

While the justice of this may not be self-evident, the logic of it is all on her side. Also the law of self-preservation.

Partition of China among the great powers would save Japan. Also the creation of a number of "independent" Chinese states, each under its own ruler. Or, finally, a combination of these eventualities.

Accordingly, come such process is under way, Japan has nibbled off Korea, Manchuria, and Jehol. She has "denaturalized" all North China, from the Great Wall to Peking and Tientsin.

She can foreclose on this territory whenever she feels like running up her flag. She is pushing westward into inner Mongolia and nobody can tell when and where she will stop.

Fighters Herd

Meanwhile, Nanking and Tokio are

If necessary, Arkansas must be prepared to vote a state sales tax to discharge this duty to the grammar grades, the governor declares.

He further proposes a constitutional amendment to be voted on next November, which would prevent the legislature from diverting this new revenue into other channels.

X X X

It is high time the state acted in the school crisis, and the governor is moving in the right direction.

There is no use debating technical changes, property debts, or other details of the school problem unless we are prepared to admit at the same time that the schools have to have more money.

That's a fact.

State revenue has declined so drastically that even with the aid of hundreds of thousands of dollars of federal money our teachers are forced to live on starvation wages.

The shameful part is that the teachers are being starved in order to protect the taxpayers' equity in PROPERTY.

X X X

The schools have a double operating problem.

They are, first, by the very nature of things large owners of real estate—and you know what it costs to carry real estate through times like these—and, secondly, they have to run, like a railroad or a daily newspaper, every day regardless of how much money they are taking in.

Because the schools owe money for their real estate, the teachers are being starved so that the taxpayers' share is publicly-owned real estate by foreclosure.

It's a disgrace—and the taxpayers know it.

We can't let the teachers pay the public's bill.

We can't let the federal government pay it—or we'll lose control of our local school system.

We have to pay this bill ourselves. And the sooner we begin doing it the better off everybody will be.

X X X

My friend Edgar G. Harris, of the West Point (Miss.) Times Leader, writes this amusing history of a typographical error in another Mississippi newspaper:

Editor Joe Richardson, of the Sunflower Tocsin, is in trouble.

In a verbiage of a wedding a few days ago, he wrote: "The roses were pink." The linotype operator used a "u" instead of an "n" and Indiana society was shocked when the local paper asserted that the "roses were pink."

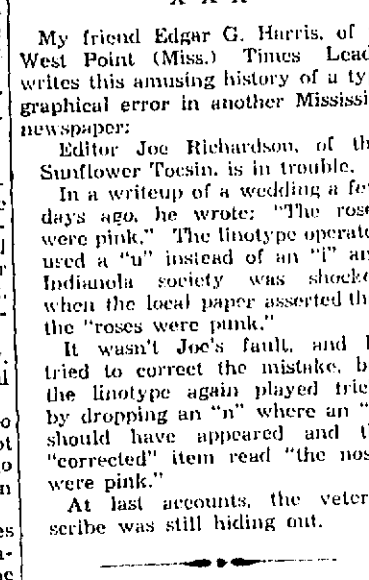

It wasn't Joe's fault, and he tried to correct the mistake, but the linotype again played tricks by dropping an "n" where an "r" should have appeared and the "corrected" item read "the roses were pink."

At last accounts, the veteran scribe was still hiding out.

CWA Program to End on Saturday

$152,000 Spent in Hempstead County by U. S. Government

All work and relief activities of the CWA program in Hempstead county will be completed by Saturday, according to Mr. Floyd.

Holding of relief and work projects is only temporary. A new set up will start as soon as state officials can work out budgets for each county under the work division and rehabilitation program of the State Emergency Relief Commission.

No information has been received Friday concerning the new program. "It probably will take several days to complete CWA records and work out details of the new program, and to permit it to start on a sound footing," Mr. Floyd said.

It was announced from Washington this week that Arkansas has been granted $10,000,000 for relief purposes for the remainder of the year. The $10,000,000 grant does not include allotments for teacher employment and transient activities. Separate grants will be made for these departments.

CWA Program Ends

WASHINGTON—(AP)—The Civil Works Administration (CWA) came to an end Friday with the man in charge, Harry L. Hopkins, pronouncing it a success.

"It resulted in a work of social usefulness that will be of benefit in the years to come," he declared.

Approximately 1,850,000 persons are still on the payroll, but most of them are to be transferred Monday to the work program of the Federal Emergency Relief Administration (FERA).

Pike and Nevada Begin Moving of Old State Bridge

Dismantled Structure Trucked Through Blevins on No. 24 Friday

PROTESTS INCREASE

Young Business Men White State Highway Department Head

Pike and Nevada counties were busy moving a bridge Friday.

Reports reaching Hope at noon said a number of trucks were passing through Blevins on highway No. 24 carrying the dismantled Murfreesboro bridge to its proposed new location on the Little Missouri river between De Lott and Prescott.

The bridge parts were being carried on six trucks, apparently operated by private landowners who are interested in the all-Nevada county route which would exclude Hope and Hempstead county from participation.

Meanwhile, protests were being filed by Hope citizens with the State Highway Department.

The Young Business Men's association directed letters Thursday night to J. R. Rhyme, head of the state department, and Pike County Judge Walter J. Mauney.

A report from Pike county Thursday night said a petition was being circulated by property owners, protesting to the State Highway Department against allowing the old state bridge to be located where it would not serve the most people.

Arkansas' Quota Is 926,000 Bales

Bankhead Bill Allows Texas 3,123,000, and Mississippi 1,063,000

WASHINGTON—(AP)—Cully A. Cobb, chief of the Cotton Section of the Farm Administration, on whose shoulders will fall much of the detail work of applying the Bankhead compulsory act, Thursday night announced the probable distribution by states of the 10,000,000 bales.

The figures were based on a five-year average of cotton production from 1928 to 1932. Widening of the base to 10 years will make no appreciable difference in the figures, Cobb said, except a more equitable distribution for states which have not increased production materially in the past few years.

Arkansas, largest cotton producing state, would be given a quota of 926,000 bales with Mississippi, the only other state to be allowed a production of over a million bales, 1,063,000.

Other state figures are:

Alabama	826,000
Georgia	817,000
Oklahoma	756,000
South Carolina	584,000
North Carolina	513,000
Louisiana	508,000
Tennessee	327,000
California	135,000
Missouri	132,000
Arizona	87,000
New Mexico	61,000
Virginia	30,000
Florida	24,000
Kentucky	5,900
Illinois	400

Wirt Refuses to Debate Red Charge

Democrats Pass Tariff Reform Bill Through Lower House

WASHINGTON—(AP)—Representative Foulkes, Michigan Democrat, disclosed Friday that Dr. William A. Wirt had declined a challenge to debate with him on Wirt's allegations that some of President Roosevelt's advisors are Communist sympathizers.

Foulkes made public Wirt's telegram which quoted Secretary Wallace of the Department of Agriculture as well as some others to the effect that the Brain Trusters were not decided on which way the country was going.

Garner Not to Retire

WASHINGTON—(AP)—Vice-President John Nance Garner denied Friday that he intended retiring from public life at the end of his term.

Tariff Passes House

WASHINGTON—(AP)—Rallying again to the presidential standard they defeated two days ago to override authority of the president to negotiate trade agreements and precluding any foreign debt reductions under its provisions.

The measure was sent to the senate with two administration-sanctioned amendments limiting to three years authority of the president to negotiate trade agreements and precluding any foreign debt reductions under its provisions.

A roll call vote on passage was forced by Republicans, resulting in approval 273 to 111. Only two Republicans—Peavy of Wisconsin and Welch of California, voted with 288 Democrats and three Farmer-Laborites for the bill.

Eleven Democrats broke over to join 99 Republicans and one Farmer-Laborite—Lundon of Minnesota—against Speaker Rainey voted for the bill.

Democrats voting against were: Brown of Michigan, Burke of California, Carpenter of Nebraska, Conner of Massachusetts, Duffey of Ohio, Gray of Indiana, Maloney of Connecticut, Monnet of Louisiana, Moran of Maine, Scruggs of Nevada, and Sechrist of Ohio.

Quick passage was foreseen in the senate by both Democratic and Republican leaders. Senator Robinson, Democrat, Arkansas, majority leader, said he did not "anticipate long delay" and Senator McNary of Oregon, minority chief, conceded it would pass the senate virtually as approved by the house.

State Has to Pay for Grade School, Tells Commission

Governor Proposes Amendment Protecting Common School System

SALES TAX LIKELY

Local Community Would Finance High School in Its Own Way

LITTLE ROCK—(AP)—Governor Futrell Friday proposed to his commission on school problems a constitutional amendment which would set up a state school system of grammar grades, for the maintenance of which a sales tax might be levied by the legislature.

Addressing the commission, which began its work last week, looking toward a solution of the public schools problem, the governor declared the state ought to provide facilities for the grade schools and then allow the local community to vote special taxes for high schools.

Reduce Present Tax

In proposing a sales tax, the governor specified that it operate at a lower level than the school tax now being levied.

Calling the commission his "Brain Trust," Futrell charged it with the responsibility of making suggestions for school changes which might be voted upon at the coming general election in November.

The amendment proposed by the governor would limit subjects taught in the grades to:

Reading, writing, arithmetic, spelling, grammar, Arkansas history, geography, phonology, hygiene and elementary science.

It would guarantee a minimum term of 120 days a year.

Examinations would determine the qualifications of teachers for a license, except that those now holding licenses would be allowed to continue without examination.

Longview Hotel Burns, 2 Are Dead

1/4-Million-Dollar Hostelry Destroyed Early Friday Morning

LONGVIEW, Texas—(AP)—A spectacular fire early Friday razed the $250,000 Hotel Longview, of 112 rooms, taking two lives, injuring a score and leaving others unaccounted for.

So quickly did the flames sweep through the three-story building that the guests barely had time to escape.

Many of them jumped to the street in their night-clothes and others were rescued from precarious positions on window-sills by the firemen.

E. F. Safford, 45, Dallas insurance man, was killed when he jumped from the third story and landed on his head.

The charred body of another person, unidentified, was found in the ruins.

BEHIND THE SCENES IN Washington

Scenes Disgusted by Democrats' Greed . . . Respect is Reserved for Fighting Progressive Group.

BY RODNEY DUTCHER
NEA Washington Correspondent

WASHINGTON.—It's just a toss-up whether the professional Republicans in Congress who ruled so arrogantly in the days of Coolidge and Hoover were any more disinterested to correspondents here than are the professional Democrats in Congress today.

Perhaps the present crop of legislators is less smug, unctuous, and self-righteous than the unlamented G. O. P. group. But their greed for patronage, their blind partisanship, and their pitifully mean tactics rival those of the Republicans after the Harding landslide.

Respect of correspondents in the seething capital therefore is reserved for the progressives on Capitol Hill—regardless of party.

The progressives are the one group who do not consider it their duty to support the administration on any and all issues, regardless of merits of the question.

They defend or criticize the administration in accordance with their own individualistic ideas at the time—ideas which they insist are based on the best interests of the great mass of people.

And when we toss bouquets at this fighting bloc, it naturally brings us around to the most "battlesome" of them all—Senator George W. Norris of Nebraska—and his latest victory over the spoilsmen.

It was a spectacular and unprecedented feat when the silver-haired Nebraska persuaded the overwhelmingly Democratic Senate to vote that all agents and employees of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation be chosen without regard to political affiliations.

That vote was revolutionary in the history of party politics. (Of course House and Senate conferees yet may join to knock out the amendment.)

I've seen Norris grimly excited before, but never more so than when that white-haired, 72-year-old warrior rushed through the cloak-rooms, lobby and corridors to round up every possible vote against Neely's motion to reconsider the ballot on his amendment.

"Come on!" he shouted to Costigan of Colorado—and, "Who knows where I can find Bone?" And he kept reiterating: "This is a fundamental vote!"

His amendment had won, 40 to 33, but after Neely's motion, Pat Harrison, Democrat whip, was scurrying about in an effort to persuade the few Democrats who had voted with Norris to abstain from voting on the second test.

Pat was so successful that Norris won by but one vote against reconsideration—35 to 34.

Norris was red-hot. He told Harrison afterward that the latter need ask no more favors from him.

To a Democratic progressive who had failed him, he said in the cloak-room: "I never expected to see you come to that."

To the reply that the vote wasn't important, he countered: "Like hell! It was fundamental!"

Norris, who believes federal jobs should always be handled on non-partisan basis, felt that the HOLC was a business organization dealing with the homes of poor people which, more than any other federal agency, should be divorced from politics.

Strangely enough, one Democrat after another, arising to defend their party's right to HOLC pie, sang paeans of admiration for Norris despite their intention of voting against him—Barkley, Neely, Smith, and others.

Neely eulogized Norris as a man to whom "the country owes more than to any other in its history with the exception of George Washington, Thomas Jefferson, and Abraham Lincoln."

What would happen if the progressives were in complete power? They'd be prosecuting the announced aims and policies of Roosevelt, though more aggressively and recklessly. That might be very bad or very good.

YOUR CHILDREN

By Olive Roberts Barton

Let Dominant Children Meet An Older Group—Helps Break The Strong-Willful of Their Ego

The best discipline a strong-willed child can have is associating with children just as strong or stronger than he. This is Olive Roberts Barton's conviction, as this article in her series on Child Training reveals.

Let us suppose that your boy or girl is a little too dominant. To be so is an excellent trait in a child, but if he gets a notion that every one must give in to his powerful will, it just isn't so good.

He can have all the qualities of leadership and still learn that there are other people to recognize, and not consider his own ego above everything else in the world.

If he doesn't learn this when he is young, he may be riding for a fall, because the dominant man of strong will is the bitterest person in the world when frustrated or disappointed. Not only that but a blow to ego causes a morbid loss of faith in himself. All people can't be lucky or successful, for all they "will" it most mightily.

This acceptance of defeat, when it comes, has to be learned in the early days if it is to be learned at all. A sort of sportsmanship must be cultivated that looks upon rivalry and another's will, as strong as his own, as natural. He won't feel any personal affront if this side of his character can be developed. It is the acceptance of defeat cheerfully that leads to a new attempt. It is those who go down into bitterness over one failure or who never try again.

Easily Offended
In his present environment it may be that he has had things too soft—too much his own way. The children he plays with may not only allow it but approve of it. They naturally gravitate toward a leader.

This being the case he quite unconsciously goes on until he will brook no contradiction or even listen to suggestion from anybody else. Sometimes he may be right, but very often he is sure to be wrong.

He can be and probably is as fine a chap as they make them, manly and frank and straightforward, courageous without any hint of the bully. It will also show, of course, in his attitude to his family, too, and those he loves best. But his parents may be pretty helpless because they are afraid of using their authority as a weapon. They think he will resent thwarting them on that account and in a measure they are right. He is very likely to think, "They can make me do this because they are bigger. It's a mean advantage to take of a fellow."

It won't do at all to have him develop this resentment, because although he may love them and respect them, over-developed "will" and "ego" is easily offended and he may decide to break off diplomatic relations altogether, regarding pleading and punishment as completely unfair and unjustified.

Meeting Equals
If possible it is better for Greek to meet Greek outside the home. If he can be introduced in some way to another group, or to boys who are old hands at a sport he is new to, the result is often miraculous.

He recognizes leadership here, or greater prowess, or wills as strong as his own. He will have to bow to some others, or perhaps just one other. And in time the lesson has been driven home without his suspecting he has been coached in character. Perhaps he will conquer this group, too. Very well. We are not out to vanquish him. If he's to be a leader, a real leader, everywhere he goes, let us be happy and glad that he is. But if he has enough experiences with other strong children, he will get the discipline he needs. No leader is qualified for his position, who has not learned this discipline.

To try to "break" his will is disastrous. He needs discipline, but he doesn't have to be a broken reed to make him acceptable to us or be useful to society. We need good leaders.

Your Health

Editor, Journal of the American Medical Association, and of Hygeia, the Health Magazine

Alcohol's Food Value Lies Only In Energy

If you're positively green with envy when you see your favorite screen star rolling her large eyes skyward in alluring, flattering manner, console yourself. In all probability the actress has used make-up tricks which you, too, can practice to your own advantage.

Rubbing warm olive oil into the roots of the little hairs stimulates their growth. Using a small brush to remove powder dust after you have made up your face is also important. Brush the brows as well as the lashes. If eyelashes are quite colorless, try grooming them with mascara or eyelash wax and see how much more wide-eyed you'll look. Of course, you have to use either quite sparingly in the daytime but, for evening, you can be more lavish with it.

How to make the lashes curly? Well, brushing them upward will help and using some sort of a curling gadget often does the trick. Whether or not they stay that way depends on how frequently you use the gadgets. Anyway, they're amusing little metal contraptions and it's fun to try them.

I am in politics for agriculture—not in agriculture for politics.—George N. Peek.

Not long ago, while in Oklahoma City, I said to a reporter who asked me about the food value of alcohol that the caloric value of the highball had been determined to be approximately the equivalent of that of three hard-boiled eggs.

The statement, cut down to say that a highball is equivalent in food value to three hard-boiled eggs, has been spread widely over the country. As a result, I have been deluged with letters during the last few weeks, particularly from organizations for prohibition and from ministers, asking the exact significance of this statement.

It becomes necessary, of course, to say some of the things that I have said repeatedly in these columns about food values.

Values of foods in nutrition are measured today not only in terms of calories, which represent energy yielded, but also in terms of other constituents—proteins, which are important in building tissues; mineral salts, which are necessary to health and growth; and particularly vitamins.

Except for the caloric value, there is no evidence that the food value of a highball approximates that of three hard-boiled eggs.

Good Friday

How wrong they were they never knew!
"Forgive them, Father," so he prayed.
"Forgive; they know not what they do!"

Was ever prayer so bravely made?
High on the cross he heard them jeer
And yet their hearts he understood
And knew that under hate's veneer
Was something genuinely good.
So used to royal kings were they
Who ruled by force their bit of land
They could not put old thoughts away.
A gentler king to understand.
To them his simple speech was strange
Because it scorned all earthly pride.
Blinded by pomp and fearing change,
Their one true friend they crucified.
He knew how men are sadly awayed.
For on the cross, with lips turned blue,
"Forgive them, Father, all!" He prayed.

"They know not what they do!"

Mrs. Dorsey McElne and Mrs. O. A. Graves were Monday guests at a most delightful bridge luncheon given by Mrs. R. P. Barlow and Miss Annie Mac Graves at Hotel Barlow in Malvern. The chosen color scheme for the large luncheon table was pink and was beautifully stressed in pink roses and snap dragons for the central adornment, and pink tapers burned in silver holders. Yellow was stressed in the decorations for the smaller tables. A most tempting three course luncheon was served. Following the luncheon, bridge was played, with the tallies and score-judges still further emphasizing the chosen color scheme.

Mr. and Mrs. N. E. Miller, who have been guests of Mr. Miller's sister, Mrs. H. H. Stuart have returned to their home in Sedalia, Mo.

AS JAPAN SEES UNCLE SAM—

JAPAN SEES U. S.

said to have come to an understanding. A lot is going on under the surface. In a word, Japan seems slowly but surely tightening her hold on the neighboring mainland.

But, looking ahead, Japan sees Russia and the United States blocking her road. Russia is there because Japanese aggression is rapidly pushing her back from the Pacific, bottling up Siberia.

Why Japan suspects the United States, however, is quite another story. The nation is all over Japan that the United States is sitting up nights trying to undermine her—and this expression is that of one of the most intelligent and widely traveled Japanese I know, not mine.

A whole succession of things was pointed out to me, proving, to the Japanese way of thinking, that such is indeed the case.

Point Out U. S. "Menaces"
First we annexed Hawaii and built one of the world's greatest naval bases there. Next we took the Philippines—"a pistol pointed at Japan's head," I was told.

Then we built the Panama Canal so our entire navy could be concentrated overnight in the Pacific.

After the Russo-Japanese war, the accusation proceeds, an American (E. H. Harriman) attempted to buy the South Manchuria Railway. Later, in 1908, Secretary of State Knox proposed the neutralization of Manchuria.

Both of these moves, in Japanese eyes, were suspect, their object being to prevent Nippon gaining a real foothold on the continent.

During the Versailles Conference, the United States took the lead in trying to oust Japan from Shantung. It did so again at Washington in 1921, never stopping until it achieved its aim.

At the same time, it maintained unrelenting pressure to squeeze the Japanese troops out of Siberia.

The exclusion act was a blow at Japanese prestige.

Last, but by no means least, after Japan seized Manchuria in 1931, it was America that marshaled the world's opposition.

It was her prodding of the League of Nations that finally led that body to take a stand necessitating Japan's resignation, and it was Washington diplomacy that framed the policy of non-recognition which the league was haggard into following.

Blocks Her "Destiny"
In a sense it is most flattering. For if Japan today stands almost isolated among the world powers, it is America, according to the Japanese, who is to blame. But at the same time it is perilous.

Why should the United States, decade after decade, pursue a policy against Japan? Because, Japanese public opinion has been led to believe America has far-reaching designs of her own in China.

Nations do not go around fighting the battles of the weak for nothing. So, the Japanese believe, it is just a question of time before Nippon will find it necessary to call a halt.

And when that time comes, anything can happen.

DOCTORS ADMIRE THIS LAXATIVE

To banish headaches, dizziness and other constipation ills doctors regularly prescribe the laxative ingredient used in Feen-a-mint, the modern, pleasant-tasting, chewing gum laxative. Feen-a-mint acts more promptly, thoroughly, and satisfactorily for it is gently released into the intestines by chewing, thus giving a "full," more natural action. Feen-a-mint is pleasant to take, but contains no richness to upset the stomach or diet. Feen-a-mint is the modern development from old-fashioned, unpleasant-tasting, habit-forming, bowel-acting laxatives. Does not interfere with duties. "Delax" is dangerous—chew Feen-a-mint for constipation. 15c and 25c at druggists.

Rev. Rule Speaks on Men's Crises

"When He Came to Himself" Topic of Fourth Night Meeting

"When He Came to Himself," were the significant words on which the fourth night sermon of the revival services at First Methodist church was founded Thursday. Before the sermon, Misses Gulula Bayse, Harriet Story and Mary Louise Keith, with Mrs. Routon accompanying at the organ, sang "The Beautiful Garden Of Prayer."

The pastor read the passage of scripture, and, after speaking of what had gone before, the life faced the wrong way and away from home, the descent into the distant land of the soul, the consequent want, he said:

"But something then happens in the inner life. The significant words of the story of the prodigal indicate that he had not been himself. But now he saw himself as he really was. He waked up. And then he saw the real man. That was a definite crisis in his career."

"There are crises in the lives of men, when the future good or ill of our course depends on our taking advantage of the opportunity. There are times when life becomes great with opportunity. Taken right we go on to fortune. Neglected or refused our lives are always narrower and poorer. This is true in the spiritual life. There are times when the door of opportunity swings open. Many afterwards say, 'I saw the way. I made the choice. I promised God. I entered the new life.' Sometimes we can not explain what opened the door. Often next Sunday week April 8th, a reception of new members. Quarterly Presbytery will convene April 10th at Camden in the Presbyterian church.

First Methodist

There will be a sunrise communion service at First Methodist church Sunday morning at 8:30 o'clock. The church school meets at 9:45 o'clock. The morning service at 10:35 o'clock will be preceded by a service for the dedication of infants in baptism. At 7:30 Sunday night the choir will sing Hoyer's cantata, "Bright Easter Morn'g." Mrs. Ralph Routon is directing. There will be 25 voices in the choir for the evening.

the smaller thing does so. We remember a passage of scripture. We recall a verse of a song. A tract comes into our hands. Someone speaks a word. A man stopped a London minister on the street one day and said, 'I heard you one day in Paris. Something you said in that sermon was the means of my conversion. You said, The latchkey is always on the outside.' That common saying opened the door, and he went in."

"The gospel of Christ is a hopeful gospel. No matter how bitter our lot it brings some sweetness. No matter how dark the night it sheds some light of morning hope. Jesus founded His movement on His belief in the essential Godlikeness of men. He saw the possibility of greatness in every life."

"To him a life that embraced evil was a normal life."

"Notice where a man's redemption begins when he says, 'I will.' All of the work of those who care. All the power of the Spirit's ministry will be useless until we arise in our manhood or womanhood and say, 'I will.' Horace Bushnell an unbeliever. One day during a revival in Yale, where he taught, he made up his mind that he did believe in right. And that he would do what ever he believed right. Forty-seven years later he said, 'There is no man in Hartford so real to me as Christ.'"

BEGIN HERE TODAY
PABLO, a handsome youth, became a fugitive when, due to circumstances beyond his control, he fled from Key West in the boat with BEAU and LOTTIE. Two thieves.

BEAU had killed a man and was a famous string of pearls in the Florida home of wealthy Mrs. Field. Pablo does not know this, but he himself is attracted to the girl. LOTTIE, a girl of 18, is the daughter of a wealthy man. She is a beautiful girl and is loved by Pablo. She is a beautiful girl and is loved by Pablo. She is a beautiful girl and is loved by Pablo.

BEAU, a famous string of pearls in the Florida home of wealthy Mrs. Field. Pablo does not know this, but he himself is attracted to the girl. LOTTIE, a girl of 18, is the daughter of a wealthy man. She is a beautiful girl and is loved by Pablo. She is a beautiful girl and is loved by Pablo. She is a beautiful girl and is loved by Pablo.

Now GO ON WITH THE STORY CHAPTER XXVI

PABLO, known now as Juanito, was harder both in muscle and in viewpoint, leaner and slightly taller. He had learned in the last three years that entertaining a millionaires was a job that never ended. Once he had let himself get a little soft and had been knocked out. The memory of that incident stayed with him. Because of it he rigorously avoided wine, women, late hours and other dissatisfactions—both mild and otherwise.

The memory of that knock-out was shared by him, also, in an uneven scar high on one cheek bone and echoing the slant of his eye.

Beau and Pablo had opened an establishment of their own on the outskirts of Havana beyond the Cristobal Colon Cemetery where faded men could come for exercise and baths to bring back at least a hint of youthful vigor. Beau "kept 'em movin'." Lottie served them bouillon and dry biscuits, and a "rubber" did his work after they had been bathed, salted and had felt the force of a jet of ice water on their flesh. This business, as Beau said, "paid damned good." It was a smart venture in Havana, where tourists are often "over-indulgent and later regret it."

The gymnasium was housed in a gleaming white building that had been altered to make it suitable. These unemployed men of flabby flesh wheezed loudly, as with eyes intent and cheeks puffed out, they pummeled one another, tripped, fell and executed footwork that made even Pablo smile. Later they would lie down, panting, only to be ordered to their backs by Beau, whose pitiless tongue could lash like a whip.

The same vague aura that takes men away from suave metropolitan clubs to a growling, bulldog-chinned trainer, made wealthy travelers desert luxurious hotels to go to Pablo's place. There they were bullied and ordered about, told in language that sometimes encompassed Elizabethan terms what they were and were not to do. Later they would emerge, pink of skin, refreshed and resolved to be more temperate.

PABLO fought occasionally and always for a good purse. He still kept before him the dream of some day finding Noyes and of going away with him to some quiet, peaceful retreat. Beau evinced great scorn, concealing secret envy, for Pablo's ability to hold on to his money. "You're sure goin' to be a wealthy old miser!" he sneered often.

The thought that any of them should ever be apprehended for the murder at Field's Camp was troubling Beau less and less. He had grown a small moustache that changed his appearance surprisingly. Lottie's hair had taken on an amazing shade of red and her eyebrows were plucked in a way that altered her expression. Pablo had changed, too, having grown taller and more slender. The scar on his cheek also gave him a different look. He was, moreover, known to all Havana as a favorite with the rich tourists. Yes, Pablo was secure. "Big Field himself couldn't touch him," Beau thought, "so long as he knocks out his man."

"You keep in shape!" he warned Pablo. "If you don't we'll all have to pay for it."

"Have you noticed me going out on any wild parties?"

"No. But, just the same, you watch your step."

"I'm doing it!" Pablo answered shortly.

They divided their earnings, which were large during the winter season, into thirds. Pablo, under the name of Juanito Lopez, bought land, invested in some sound bonds, gave prodigally to the orphanages of Cuba and gambled a little.

Across the hard-beaten road where each day plodded oxen with cane-laden carts, stood a suburban grocery store and in the apartment which was above Lottie, Pablo and Beau lived. The road was their front yard, the roof their garden. Beau who could lean over the rail of the open, twisting, rear stair to call "¡coco botellas de inger!" was satisfied since five bottles of lager were among the few things necessary for his peace. Pablo didn't care where they lived. Lottie murmured a good deal about dwelling in "a swell house" at La Playa de Marianao, the fashionable bathing beach where the Havana Yacht Club is located. "You can always see something goin' on there," she pointed out but she never persuaded the others to move.

Pablo read avidly between workouts in the gymnasium, cross country runs and rub-downs. Books gave him the peace and forgetfulness he could find nowhere else. The truly happy, he realized, did not need an antidote for life nor to turn sharply from the sweetness of the past because of its contrast with the present. He wondered often about Estelle Field—what she was doing, and where she might be and whether or not she was happy.

PABLO had sent more than one messenger to Key West to search for Noyes but not one of them had found any trace of him. A lame old woman lived in the shack on the island, he learned. She had broken her hip a few years before, she told the inquirers.

and it left her so that she could move only a few steps. She lived alone. Her old neighbors, she said, helped her. No, she had never seen a thin-faced, stoop-shouldered man who wore eyeglasses with heavy lenses. Never! God could witness that as truth. Never had she seen such a man!

Pablo would have found her protestations a bit too hearty but those he sent were so eager to see what the next turn of the road might bring that they missed this important sign post. Pablo had offered a large reward for finding this man whose name they did not know but whose description they could have narrated in their sleep.

Returning after the search each messenger pocketed his expense money and remuneration, concluding that the one he sought was dead.

But Pablo would not believe Noyes was dead. He lived only for his dream of some day finding his old friend. It was the only hope he had. Lottie and Beau were not the sort of companions with whom he could be content. "Good women," he felt, were lost to him, and a life of meager joys spread ahead. He had become a rather jaded, somewhat cynical young man.

IN the grip of a mood which was a mixture of dull hopelessness and sharp disgust, Pablo turned toward Havana one raw, February morning. The warmth of the previous day had been wiped from the air by a north wind and the sky was low.

The apartment had been creepingly cold and during breakfast Lottie had been bitter and sharp of tongue, making Pablo, as she often did, a target for her anger. Her back hurt "like hell!" she said. Then she tossed her head, soiled and glowered at Pablo. "It was awful you while you had that fever that done it," she went on. "I had to do everything for you. You just laid there like a log!"

Pablo had heard this before. He could silence her and turn her mood with a casual kiss, he knew, but this morning he could not bring himself to offer such an olive branch. He said instead glumly that she should have let him die. "Hell, this is a merry party!" Beau put in, looking at Lottie shrewdly. She was a pretty smart kid, he felt, yet she always stumbled in her too apparent and over-eager approach of Pablo. Or else she made a scene and Pablo hated them even more than Beau did.

Pablo rose from his chair. He was going to Havana, he announced. He didn't care what happened to the old idiot who came to slap each other in the gymnasium and to fall into a trance after two minutes of sparring. He was fed up with the whole business and sick of it! Just as soon as he could he was going to get out of it! Then, shamed by this outbreak which surprised him even more than it surprised Lottie and Beau, he left them, speechless and gasping after him.

Lions Lose to Oklahoma City in Next to Final Round

WICHITA, Kan., (AP)—Oklahoma City University's defending champion Cardinals became finalists in the women's national A. A. U. basketball tournament Thursday night by defeating the El Dorado (Ark.) Lions, 38-17.

The Red Birds will meet their arch-rivals, Tulsa Business College, conqueror of the semifinals of Shreveport Meadows Draughton, in the finals Friday night.

The Lions out-maneuvered the champions early in the game, but soon wilted.

Failure of Patterson, forward, to sink free throws, cost the Arkansas team heavily, and the Lions trailed by 8-15 at the half time intermission. Then the Cardinal offense, starting with the regularly successful tip-off play, Lucille Thumman to Frances Williams, worked to give the Red Birds a 29-15 advantage at the end of the third quarter.

Tulsa Business College advanced to the finals with a 34-20 victory over Meadows Draughton of Shreveport, La. Shaw Stephens Legion post team from Maplewood, Mo., a St. Louis suburb, advanced to the final round in the tomboy flight with a 25-20 victory over the Fort Worth (Texas) Brauder Ice team.

Pasture Good Use for Rented Acres

Legumes Maintain Soil Fertility and Prevent it From Washing Away

Experiment station results show that feed crops, like corn, that requires clean cultivation are harder on soil than legumes and pasture plants that prevent soil from washing, states Frank Stanley, county agent. It is reasonable to assume, he says, that plants that produce feed and maintain soil fertility are undoubtedly the best for land, and the most dependable and desirable legumes and pasture plants fall in this class.

Since there is an acute shortage of good pastures in many parts of this country, it is good business to plant the rented acres to permanent pasture on many cotton farms according to Mr. Stanley.

Naturally, a farmer doesn't have to confine himself to the use of rented acres for the production of food, feed crops and pasture. He is only expected to use the rented acres to produce such feed crops, food and pasture as are needed in addition to the normal production of those crops on the farm. However, if the pasture now on the farm is inadequate, it may be enlarged or the food or feed crop acreage may be increased to meet normal needs.

Secretary of Agriculture Wallace has said, "The acres left out of basic crop production this year must be protected from further destruction by washing. In terms of practical farm management, that means seeding them to cover crops or to permanent pasture. In many sections of the country, the trends in Agriculture indicate that the farmer will profit most by seeding them to permanent pasture. Certainly that is the practice which fits in best with the national policy of cutting acreage in basic crops, and at the same time conserving soil and soil fertility."

EASTER CUSTOMS around the World

In Rome the celebration of Easter transcends all geographical boundaries. Practically every nation on earth maintains church representation there and on Easter Sunday the commemoration of the resurrection attains impressive solemnity. One of the most brilliant events of Holy Week is the great Easter procession in which is carried a cross made from a piece of the true cross.

If You Must Go

By Helen Welshimer

IF you must go, dear heart, be brave and tell me; A new road calls, a gipsy tide runs high; A serene comes drifting through low darkness; It would be kinder, when you say good-by, If you should do it firmly and forever, Before you heed the challenge of far drums, Not leave me asking through the dim day's passage: "How can it be that now he never comes?"

FOR this, beloved, can break the heart of women: That waiting for swift steps upon the floor, That watching for tall shadows at a window, A vibrant knock that sings against a door. Slow learning as today becomes tomorrow, A long farewell was in a brief good-night, So when you go, dear heart, be brave and tell me. . . I shall not cry till you are out of sight.

Creosolium is powerful in the treatment of colds and coughs, yet it is absolutely harmless and is pleasant and easy to take. Your own druggist guarantees Creosolium by refunding your money if you are not relieved after taking Creosolium as directed. Beware the cough or cold that hangs on. Weekly Sunday School Lesson
The Risen Christ

Text: John 20:1-16
The International Uniform Sunday School Lesson for April 1.
By WM. E. GILROY, D. D.
Editor of The Songreationalist

The story of the resurrection of Jesus is told by different writers and in different ways. Some have seen in these different narratives conflicting evidence, and they have made the differences a basis of doubt. It is not much more reasonable to say that it is these very differences that destroy all idea of collusion, all notion that the disciples were making up "cunningly devised fables," and were agreed about telling the same thing?

What we have in these resurrection stories is the simple narratives as they came out of the experiences of the disciples and as they developed in the early church. The resurrection of Jesus would not be a miracle, if we could explain it, and if we knew all about it. The one great clear fact that does stand out is that, at the very hour of the disciples' deepest gloom, when with great reluctance they were turning back to their homes and to their old lives, the disappointed followers of a sublime hope that they were reluctant to give up, there came to them the clear assurance that Jesus was not dead, but was living.

With that conviction, there was the revival of their faith that quickened them into newness of living and sent them forth with a new power to establish the Christian Church and to build upon the great foundation of Christ himself the power and influence of Christianity.

Who that reads these narratives, and that considers all that these experiences had to do with the founding of the Christian religion, can doubt the reality of the experience? It is not ours to explain, but we are brought face to face with these mystic, spiritual experiences in which the disciples had a clear vision of their risen Lord. The most beautiful of all the narratives is that concerning Mary Magdalene, coming early in the morning, while it was yet dark, to the sepulchre where Jesus was buried, and finding the stone rolled away. Mary had come, apparently, rather in love and in loyalty than with any clear faith that she would find things changed.

When she found the stone rolled away from the sepulchre, instead of waiting, she came running to Simon Peter and to the "other disciple whom Jesus loved," probably John himself, making known to them her amazing discovery. Peter and John immediately ran to the sepulchre, but even so, John was outdistanced by the loving John, who arrived first. John looked in, but did not enter the tomb. Impulsive Peter went all the way, and discovered that the body of Jesus was gone. The disciples went to their homes. We wonder with what thoughts in their hearts. But Mary, still mystified, still with her love and loyalty, rather than with any clear hope, stood outside of the sepulchre weeping. It was then that she had the vision of the two angels and, turning from the tomb, saw Jesus standing there, though she knew not that it was Jesus.

'Sugar Beauty' Lured by Films

By happy chance, Mrs. John H. Spreckels, above, wife of the sugar king, may play a film lead role. A movie director, seeking a society woman for the part, saw her at the races, and obtained an introduction. He was astounded when he found who his "prospect" was and more astounded when she agreed to a screen test. Now they are talking contracts.

Why did she not know him? Was it still somewhat dark, and because of the darkness that she did not recognize him? She supposed that he was the gardener, and that perhaps he knew where the body had been taken.

It was then that Jesus spoke her name, and at the sound of his voice she understood, and she said, "Master."

What more can any of us say than that? It is precisely this habit of allowing the so-called practical man to guide public policy that has brought more countries than one into their present troubles.—Dr. Nicholas Burray Butler, president of Columbia University.

Crooks and Bori Head Cast For "Manon"

American Tenor To Sing
Role of Chevalier
This Saturday

Told by

RICHARD CROOKS

IN the broadcast of Massenet's "Manon" by the Metropolitan Opera Association this Saturday afternoon the friends I have made throughout the country—and I hope they are many—in ten years of concert work will have their first opportunity to hear me sing in opera, except such of them as have chosen to hear me in the Metropolitan Opera House.

So far New York and Philadelphia are the only cities in this country in which I have appeared on the stage. I have done some operatic work in Europe but I still regard my debut as the Chevalier des Grieux in "Manon" as the real beginning of my operatic career. All the others were sort of "trial heats" and "work-outs."

And if anybody should ask me "I'll tell them that singing in opera is 'simply swell.' Not that I mean to give up concert work, whatever happens. That is too precious. Moreover, operatic and concert singing are complementary to each other and both are necessary for the making of a well-rounded artist. Either without the other is, I think, dangerously narrowing and I find that all my colleagues agree with me."

Finds Artists Kind and Helpful
There is, however, a certain fascination about operatic work which one does not get in concert. I suppose that the tradition behind opera has something to do with it: then the lights, the scenery, the costumes and the brilliant audiences, all add to its glamour. Too, there is the constant and close association one has with his fellow artists not only in the performances themselves but in the long days of study, preparation and rehearsal.

And I have found, particularly in the Metropolitan, a spirit of kindness and helpfulness among the artists which is altogether contrary to the generally accepted idea. The encouragement and kindly care I received at my debut from my colleagues in the cast, from Miss Bori, Mr. De Luca, Mr. Rothlier, from all of them, including the chorus, make a very happy memory.

As to Massenet's "Manon," it is an altogether delightful opera, undoubtedly Massenet's masterpiece, full of the polish, grace and elegance which characterizes French music at its best. It is based, of course, upon the classic French novel, "Manon Lescaut" by the Abbé Prévost, and it is set in the eighteenth century when France was under the Regency.

The Story of "Manon"

In the courtyard of an inn in Amiens the Chevalier des Grieux meets Manon Lescaut, a very pretty, but none too trustworthy girl journeying to a convent school. The usual thing happens. They elope to Paris—in a coach belonging to an old fellow who himself had been making eyes at the young woman. The Chevalier would get the consent of his father to their marriage but instead of consenting the stern father has him kidnapped and taken out of danger. Manon quickly consoles herself with a wealthy nobleman brought to her by her none too honorable cousin, Lescaut, an officer of the royal guards.

Massenet's Masterpiece To Be Broadcast From Metropolitan

Des Grieux, in despair, enters the Seminary of St. Sulpice with the idea of taking holy orders. There he is found by Manon who lures him back into the wild life of Paris. They go to a great gambling house and the Chevalier, winning unduly, is accused of cheating. He is arrested by order of his father and disappears.

Time passes. The butterfly wings of Manon become soiled and crushed. Under the law of France she is arrested and sentenced to transportation for life to Louisiana, then a penal settlement where girls of her kind were sent. Des Grieux learns of her fate and with her cousin Lescaut, sets out to free her before she sails. The plot fails; yet the two meet once more, on the road to Havre where the girl, now worn and ill, dies in the arms of her faithful lover.

Some of Opera's Charming Airs

The opera is in five acts and through all of them the music is charming. There are numerous air of beauty and many fine ensembles in the first act are Manon's piquant account of her journey, "Je suis en core étourdie." Lescaut's wise warning "Regarde-moi dans les yeux," and the duo of Manon and Des Grieux, "Nous vivrons à Paris." The second act brings Manon's "Adieu, petite table," and the popular "La Révolte de Manon," sung by Des Grieux. In the third act Des Grieux sings the lovely "Ah, fuyez l'ouïe image," and there is a long duet between him and Manon. The fourth act, the gambling scene, brings Manon's charming Gavotte and her plaintive air "O douleur l'avenir nous sépare."

Lucrèce Bori, the most charming of Manons, will take the role, with me as Des Grieux. Giuseppe de Luca will be the Lescaut and Léon Rothlier, the Count. Others in the cast will be Angelo Rada, George Cehanowsky, Max Altgiass, Pearl Besuner, Phyllis Falco, Dorothy Flexner and Paolo Annan. Louis Hasselmann will conduct.

A fashion show
Arranged for You

WE MUST be in fashion today.

Fashion reaches even into thoughts and speech, into our every activity, into almost every incidental of our present-day background. Though elusive and constantly changing, we must be familiar with this force—if we are to hold our places as active members of a modern community.

To speak of young girls as flappers is to date ourselves as immediately post-war. Plush and mohairs would stamp the past on our home furnishings. And antiquated household appliances would continue to submerge us in drudgery distinctly unfashionable.

There is no better parade of fashion than that which is presented to you daily in the pages of this newspaper. Through the advertisements, leading merchants and manufacturers are telling you about fashions in living.

Hats and shoes now being worn, the better kind of household conveniences, the best values in foods, decorations, furnishings—each advertisement contains sincere and truthful news of the latest offerings of the stores. With the advertisements you can keep abreast of the times. You will find that it pays you to read them every day.
